Engaging in Arts & Crafts activities is critically important to the social, cognitive and emotional development of a child.

Children who are encouraged to be creative, feel a sense of accomplishment and achievement.

Seeing their finished creations ignites a burst of that 'Feel-good' energy and can instill a sense of accomplishment and achievement, which naturally promotes happiness.

By creating art, children strengthen the connectivity between the brain's left and right hemisphere.

Arts & Craft also encouraged important visual processing skills such as detecting sequences and pattern recognition. Children use these skills for solving Maths problems and reading.
